

Through Moanin' Pines

Although the African-American composer and singer Harry T. Burleigh deserves to be remembered for his own impressive achievements, history's emphasis on his providential encounter with Dvorak is understandable. The world-famous Dvorak was cajoled into accepting the directorship of the National Conservatory of Music in New York in 1892. He agreed with the school's founder that American concert music should express the character of the country through the use of folk idioms. When he met Burleigh, a scholarship voice student, Dvorak leaped at the chance to study spirituals with such a source—a musician who had learned them not from books, but at his grandfather's knee.

Dvorak often asked Burleigh to come to dinner and sing spirituals for him. Not only did Dvorak extol these richly varied songs in the press, but also, more persuasively, adopted their style for his own Symphony "From the New World." The spirit of black (and Native American) music gives this symphony its special earthiness and emotional candor—while I cannot disagree with those who find it imperfectly constructed, it never fails to elevate my pulse. (For pianists, Dvorak left as American souvenirs the Humoresques.) He publicly acknowledged Burleigh by presenting him as soloist in Dvorak's tasteful orchestration of "Old Folks at Home," and dedicating the manuscript to him.

Burleigh said it was Dvorak's reaction that convinced him that spirituals should be made available to all people. In 1917, with his simple but evocative "Deep River," Burleigh began his celebrated series of spiritual settings for solo voice and piano. For the first time, this body of folksong, already internationally popularized by such touring choruses as the Fisk Jubilee Singers, could be included in conventional recitals. Burleigh's spirituals have become so indispensable to the repertoire that effort is required to remember what a sensational novelty they were when first espoused by concert singers—both black and white—in the teens and twenties. In response to the songs themselves, his accompaniments range from the overflowing exuberance of "Ev'ry Time I Feel de Spirit" to the austere archaism of "Weepin'

Mary," and successfully navigate between the Scylla of self-conscious cleverness and the Charybdis of dutiful timidity.

Although Burleigh modestly wished to be remembered primarily for his dissemination of black folksong, he was in fact recognized as one of America's leading art song composers before he published his first spiritual. His Five Songs of Laurence Hope (a stirring cycle for those willing to surrender to the exhibitionistic emotionality of the once-famous poems) was premiered in a 1915 Carnegie Hall recital by no less than John McCormack. Among other famous singers to feature his original songs were Bori, Schumann-Heink, and Amato.

Burleigh composed his only work for solo piano, From the Southland, in 1907. (Regrettably, the liner notes to the recent Burleigh CD give this date as 1904—more regrettably, I am the writer who made this error.) While some of the pieces incorporate spiritual strains, others, like "Through Moanin' Pines," offer original melodies in folk style. Two passages epitomize Burleigh's palpable delight in harmonic elaboration; the expected return of the opening melody is tantalizingly delayed by a melting sequence of rich chords, and the piece's lingering, reluctant conclusion experiments with three different harmonizations of the same melodic fragment before moving on to the final phrase. (A movement from the suite was included in the historic 1912 Clef Club concert of black music in Carnegie Hall, as scored for the 125-piece orchestra of strings, brass, percussion, mandolins, banjos, and fourteen upright pianos.)

---

From the Southland (Premier 1041) includes Burleigh's piano suite, art songs, and spirituals. Hilda Harris, Philip Creech, Steven Cole, and Arthur Woodley sing, and I am the pianist. The first Burleigh biography ever, Hard Trials, by Anne Key Simpson, was published by Scarecrow Press in 1993.

The complete In the Southland has been published by G. Schirmer in Four Early 20th Century Piano Suites by Black Composers and also separately, as edited by Joseph Smith.

Harry T. Burleigh

Through Moanin' Pines

Harry T. Burleigh
(1866-1949)

Andante semplice (♩ = 66 M.M.)

The first system of musical notation consists of two staves. The upper staff is in treble clef and the lower staff is in bass clef. The key signature has two sharps (F# and C#), and the time signature is 4/4. The music begins with a dynamic marking of mf. The melody in the upper staff is characterized by a series of eighth and sixteenth notes, often beamed together. The bass line provides a steady accompaniment with chords and single notes. The system concludes with a rit. (ritardando) marking and a pp (pianissimo) dynamic marking.

The second system continues the piece. It starts with a a tempo marking. The melody continues with similar rhythmic patterns. A poco rit. (poco ritardando) marking is placed over the middle of the system. The system ends with a mf a tempo marking.

The third system begins with a p (piano) dynamic marking. The melody features some accents. A poco accel. (poco accelerando) marking is present in the middle. The system concludes with a cresc. (crescendo) marking.

The fourth system features a decresc. (decrescendo) marking. The melody continues with a rit. (ritardando) marking. The system ends with a morendo marking, which is a final decrescendo.

First system of a piano score in G major. The right hand features a melodic line with a slur over the first four measures and a dynamic marking of f a tempo in the fifth measure. The left hand provides harmonic support with chords and single notes.

Second system of the piano score. The right hand has a melodic line with a slur and a dynamic marking of mf. The left hand has a dynamic marking of p. The system concludes with a cresc. (crescendo) marking.

Third system of the piano score. The right hand has a melodic line with a slur and a dynamic marking of pp. The left hand has a dynamic marking of pp.

Fourth system of the piano score. The right hand has a melodic line with a slur and a dynamic marking of f. The left hand has a dynamic marking of p. The system concludes with a rit. (ritardando) marking.

Fifth system of the piano score. The right hand has a melodic line with a slur and a dynamic marking of pp. The left hand has a dynamic marking of p. The system concludes with a rit. (ritardando) marking.